

The Quetzalcoatl is an ancient Central American deity whose name means “feathered serpent”.

They are regarded across a number of ancient civilizations as the god of wind and rain, as well as the creator of the world and mankind.

Throughout Aztec civilization they are also known as the patron god of learning, agriculture and the arts.